Nubia

The Nubian civilization was also located near the River Nile in northern Sudan and southern Egypt. As the people lived side by side with the Ancient Egyptians, they shared a lot of similarities including the construction of pyramids. The Nubian region was known as the Ta-Seti Kingdom and it ruled in Egypt from 712 to 657 BC. After the Egyptians had regained their independence from the Nubians, the Nubians continued their civilization for over 100 years in Sudan. Also, this culture is well known for its advancements in language and writing. They translated several religious books and kept a written record of their laws, rites and religion.

The region in which the Nubians lived was rich in gold, ivory, and ebony. However, the climate was very harsh because rains were infrequent. Because many could not survive in the harsh climate, the Nubian civilization was less in number than the Egyptian civilization. The Nubian civilization converted to Christianity in 540 AD. They are believed to be one of the first civilizations in the Middle East to spread Christianity in the region.