Trench Warfare

Between 1916 and 1917, trench warfare occurred on both of the eastern and western frontlines. Soldiers dug out trenches that they used to fire at the enemy, mostly with machine guns and chemical weaponry. The area in between the trenches was covered in mines and it was extremely dangerous to be caught in this region. Millions of soldiers died in these trenches and neither side gained any real advantage over the other.