Arrival of the United States and Russia’s Departure

On both the eastern and western frontlines, the European armies found themselves at an impasse. Things only began to change when American troops arrived in the spring of 1917. America was angry because its ships had been attacked and joined forces with Britain against Germany. Russia was forced to abandon the war when the Bolshevik Revolution emerged back in Petrograd.