attack London. Between September 1940 and May 16, 1941, London's population and other British urban communities as far north as Glasgow persevered through the German attack known as the Blitz.

After May 1941, the Luftwaffe was redirected to the Soviet Union. On the night of November 14, 1940, 440 German planes dropped more than 1,000 tons of explosives on Coventry. They caused a chaos in which 568 individuals were killed and 863 seriously wounded. During the Blitz, more than 40,000 were killed and approximately 50,000 were wounded. Hitler's goal was to discourage and destroy any resolve of the British forces. However, the plan backfired. The British people became strengthened in their resolve to fight the Germans and even spoke with the King and Queen as they walked among the local people in London. After Buckingham Palace had been hit, Queen Elizabeth stated: 'I'm glad we've been bombarded – now I feel we can look the East End in the face.'

Because Hitler targeted civilians, the RAF took advantage of the time to regroup and get ready for the next attack. The next German attack occurred on September 15th, now known as the Battle of Britain. The Luftwaffe believed that the RAF was severely weakened and took the opportunity to launch a focused attack on southeast England. The RAF destroyed many of the Luftwaffe and the Battle of Britain finally came to an end. After two days, Hitler put off Operation Sea Lion when he saw he had limited resources to pursue another attack. Churchill is known to have stated, 'Never in the field of human conflict was so much owed by so many to so few.'
