Romania's supply of oil was crucial to the German war machine, and in September 1940, Germany discarded Romania's monarch and gave its support to a rightist government who began on an energetic crusade against the Jews. In November 1940, Romania joined the Axis Powers. In June 1941, it initiated an attack against the Soviet Union.

In March 1941, Yugoslavia signed the Tripartite Pact with Germany, Italy, and Japan. But after a rebellion in which Prince Paul was ousted from office, the people repealed the Pact on the next day. Enraged, Hitler ordered the destruction of Yugoslavia. On April 6, Belgrade was flattened and about 4,000 people were murdered by April 12. However, the rest of Yugoslavia fought the Germans under the leadership of social partisans, who were driven by Josip ‘Tito’ Broz. Furthermore, the Chetnik rebels did not agree with social partisans, but they still helped to fight against the German forces.

It took the Axis powers just eleven days to take full command after surrender. The Germans gave Croatia their freedom as a rightist republic and the Croatian government began to kill their Jews as a result.

Mussolini's experience in North Africa proved just as unprofitable as in the Mediterranean. On September 13, 1940, Italian forces attacked British-controlled Egypt from their bases in Libya. The English and Commonwealth powers were unfathomably dwarfed but they still beat the Italians out of Egypt. They advanced into Libya and took various Libyan beachfront towns including Tobruk. Tobruk was a vital town in the war that changed hands a few times before forces were withdrawn from the area. The British Prime Minister wanted to separate Libya's capital Tripoli from the war but with the Greeks being bombarded by the Germans, he was forced to redirect his troops and help them instead.

In February 1941, Hitler sent Erwin Rommel to North Africa to settle matters once and for all. Churchill stated about Erwin Rommel: ‘We have a very daring and skillful opponent against us, and may I say, across the havoc of war, a great general.’ Over the following two years, the Allied Forces fought the Axis Powers in a difficult war. The Axis powers pushed
