The Cold War

America’s stance on the Cold War began to influence Vietnam. America believed that if North Vietnam fell, it would have a domino effect on the communist nations within Southeast Asia. As a result of this belief, America supported Ngo Dinh Diem who supported democracy versus communism. With America’s support, he seized the government in the south. In 1955, he announced the Republic of Vietnam and cancelled the upcoming elections that were scheduled for the following year.
