The Tet Offensive

The Tet Offensive began in 1968, where the Viet Cong and the North Vietnamese Army launched attacks on almost 30 American sites throughout South Vietnam. Although the American army was able to push the enemy back, the media at home portrayed the attack as devastating for America. As a result, many people withdrew their support for the war in Vietnam. An ugly incident surfaced at this time, known as the My Lai Massacre. While in Vietnam, a group of soldiers killed and raped countless unarmed civilians in a little Vietnamese village. The media pushed this story to the public, which caused many Americans to hate their own soldiers.
