own pyramids, all of which were encased in dazzling white limestone. Not only did they provide the eternal resting places for the kings, they showcased the wealth and prestige of the living gods on earth because this is how Ancient Egyptians saw their rulers. Over the years, scholars have put forth various theories as to how these awe-inspiring monuments were constructed, especially with the technology available at the time. Some scholars suggest that the technology used to construct the pyramids was far more advanced than what we know of and has subsequently been lost over time. Initially, it was thought that these imposing structures were built using slaves but current archaeological findings have debunked this story. It is now known that skilled architects, artists and workers received a salary for building these great monuments.