Vietnamization and the American Extraction

As more Americans joined the anti-war movement, Nixon promised that he would withdraw American troops out of Vietnam and allow the South Vietnam to govern the region. Nixon did extract some soldiers but he also authorized campaigns to bomb the Viet Cong in Laos and Cambodia. Both of these nations were neutral during the war. Nixon is known to have approved the order without informing Congress, probably because Congress would not have agreed with what he wished to do. When these campaigns were discovered and the Pentagon Papers published in 1971, President Nixon had no choice but to negotiate a treaty to end the war.
