Yet there were worse times to come with the arrival of Genghis Khan. Up until the Great Khan, Mongolia had consisted of scattered tribes but Ghengis Khan was able to bring them all under his rule. Over time, he had totally crushed any resistance and spread his army across most of Asia. However, Goryeo had been miraculously left untouched. His son Ogedei Khan looked towards Goryeo in 1231 CE. Within a year, Goryeo's capital had transferred to Kanghwa Island where the ruling classes were safe from the Mongolian hoard. However, raiders attacked the people six times during the following 30 years. In 1258, the military ruler was killed and the king was reinstated with every power he once possessed. Goryeo forged a peace treaty with Mongolia but did not gain its independence until General Yi Song-gye founded the Joseon Dynasty.