that were conducted to appease the spirits of the dead. Decorated tombs were built to hold the deceased ancestors and their belongings that were supposedly needed in the afterlife. Furthermore, the king was thought to have the ability to act as an intermediary between his living subjects and the deceased. The people saw the king’s rule as a divine right, which later became known as The Mandate of Heaven. This mandate was established during the Zhou Dynasty but its origins come from the Shang Dynasty.