The technical term is covariant. A declaration can also be `[unchecked out T]`, which means the RBS type system doesn't try to match the types of the generic class.

If you want to go the other way and have classes be type match with subclasses, then the term is countervariant and you indicate that with `[in T]`.