According to the district magistrate, even in July 1907, the company was in debt and was therefore anxious to raise further capital through shares and subscriptions.[116] At a public meeting in Salem, VOC confessed as much when he alluded to the heavy debts incurred on the purchase of the steamers.[117]

In debt or not, the company by early 1907 owned two steamers enthusing its investors and the public. Soon SSNCo was surging ahead taking the fight into the enemy camp.
