1908, he was very much in the thick of politics appearing on public platforms and organizing much Swadeshi activity. When he rejoined the company formally—if at all—is not clear. But he was in coastal Andhra in early June visiting Guntur, Kakinada and Masulipatnam to raise capital. As a result, the local municipal chairman and a few merchants subscribed to 400 shares, paying the first of five instalments.[98] A month later, he was in Godavari district again, on 'a touting expedition', as the police described it. Arriving at Rajahmundry from Ellore, he managed to sell 200 shares at the local school where one teacher took as many as twenty-five shares.[99]

Somasundara Bharati's visit to Rajahmundry at the end of July is described in much detail by a CID inspector. It was a new moon day; for the fifth successive month, local merchants had closed shop on that auspicious day to hold meetings—a sign of their growing political strength. Many vakils too were present in the audience of about 200 people. Towards the end of the meeting Somasundara Bharati was introduced and his English speech was rendered into Telugu. While a capital of Rs 7,50,000 lakh had been raised, he said, there were still 10,000 shares waiting to be subscribed to. Claiming that the company was in full ownership of two steamers, he urged them to take up shares pointing out that the Tamil merchants were patronizing the company despite the extra cost. To inspire confidence, he said that BI, which had monopolized the trade for forty years, was now cutting fares, and consequently losing Rs 30,000–40,000 every month.[100] While SSNCo had lost Rs 13,000 in the first year of its operations, the loss had come down to only Rs 2,000 in the second year. He compared this favourably with the experience of the Bengal company serving Chittagong and Calcutta, which had lost Rs 28,000 in the first year but had still managed to wrest the business from its British rivals. SSNCo also planned to extend its operations between Tuticorin and Kakinada before long and said that he expected the Telugu brethren to support the venture. While 500 shares had been subscribed to in Krishna and Guntur districts, and 200 in Kakinada, in two days in Rajahmundry he could canvass only 150 shares. Stating that he would be staying at Kanaparti Sriramulu's for only another
