too had reached Bombay. The cost of the boilers, Rs 32,000, was to be paid in four instalments. The first instalment had been paid with the support of Si.Su.V. (S.S.V. Krishna Pillai), A.Mu.Ma. (A.M.M. Arunachalam Pillai) and A.Su.Ve. (A.S.V. Velayudham Pillai), all directors of the company—proof that some at least of the directors had not given up hope and were in fact prepared to invest further into the venture.[11] Renewed efforts were afoot to raise more money.
