not be judged by the commercial yardstick, and advanced Rs 70,000.[24] The brothers agreed, and decided to invest more even at the risk of losing everything. On returning home, they placed the matter before their joint family. To their great happiness, the entire family—mother, brother, wives and children—were willing to take further risks. Rs 50,000 was borrowed from three Palghat Pattars (Tamil Brahmins)[25] and remitted to SSNCo. A police report said that Srinivasachari had been appointed an Agent of the company, and the steamers pledged to S.N. Thirumalachari for Rs 3 lakh.[26]

⚓

How was the advance from the Mandayam brothers utilized? According to Gillman, Thirumalachari's Rs 50,000 was disbursed in the following manner:[27]

in Rs

National Bank of India, Tuticorin on account of final instalment of the Gallia:	19,000
AR.AR.SM. Somasundara Chetty towards his loan of Rs 22,000:	10,000
S.N. Sankara Narayana Aiyar (towards his debt of Rs 10,000):	5,000
?S.A.Rm (towards a debt of Rs 10,000)	5,000
Soonderdas Dhurumsey & Co., Bombay (towards balance of commission on purchase of steamers)	2,000
A Colombo claim (probably, Cargo Despatch Boat Co.)	3,500
Remitted to Bombay towards cost of new boilers for the Gallia	5,500
Total	50,000

After these settlements, SSNCo's remaining debts in Tuticorin were: