Bharati did not stop with printed appeals. Some youths from India's office went around with a collection box taking contributions for the fund. When a poor woman learnt of the cause, she gladly offered some of the aubergines that she had just bought. Whether this was true or not, Bharati's anecdote was meant to inspire the people.[121]

The Gallia was completely out of debt, wrote Bharati a week later. Once again indulging in raising hopes, he asserted that funds were flowing in in response to India's appeal. Arrangements were also being made to publish
