indolence of the rich merchants (Figure 20).[128] Some months later, on the occasion of Deepavali, Bharati made a renewed call for funds for the Swadeshi company. As the ships were grounded, people were losing on their investments. It was therefore imperative that, money should be collected on this festive occasion: not only would it help revive the company it would also result in religious merit.[129] In another cartoon, he depicted Deepavali, personified as a deity, handing over a purse to SSNCo (Figure 21).[130]
