[13] Molony, Book of South India, p. 122. Molony was the district collector and magistrate of Tirunelveli for a year during 1912–13.

[14] Brown, From Calcutta to Bombay Coasting, p. 56.

[15] Pate, Madras District Gazetteers: Tinnevelly, p. 20.

[16] Illustrated Guide to the South Indian Railway, p. 282.

[17] Brown, From Calcutta to Bombay Coasting, p. 56.

[18] Balachandran, Globalizing Labour, p. 5. 'Britain was a sea-power; shipping was its life-line' as the socialist Asoka Mehta put it, Indian Shipping, p. 25.

[19] Thorner, Investment in Empire, pp. 7–8; 9–20; 22–43.

[20] Ibid., pp. 7–8; 9–20; 22–43. Also see Kumar, ed., Cambridge Economic History of India, vol. 2, p. 563.

[21] Kumar, ed., Cambridge Economic History of India, vol. 2, |p. 850.

[22] Amrith, Crossing the Bay of Bengal, pp. 28, 104.

[23] Ibid., p. 103.

[24] Darwin, After Tamerlane, p. 237.

[25] Ibid., pp. 237–39.

[26] Coates, Old 'Country Trade' of the East Indies, p. ix.

[27] Blake, B.I. Centenary, p. 13. My account of the history of BI draws extensively, unless otherwise noted, from Blake's centenary history and the meticulously researched academic monograph, Munro, Maritime Enterprise and Empire.

[28] Blake, B.I. Centenary, p. 60.

[29] Munro, Maritime Enterprise and Empire, pp. 68, 311.

[30] Ibid., p. 67.

[31] Ibid., p. 316.

[32] Asoka Mehta states that in his career Lord Inchcape ruined over a score of Indian shipping companies. Indian Shipping, p. 31.

[33] Blake, B.I. Centenary, p. 166.

[34] Munro, Maritime Enterprise and Empire, p. 316.

[35] Blake, B.I. Centenary, p. 73.

[36] Munro, Maritime Enterprise and Empire, p. 147.

[37] Stuart, Manual of the Tinnevelly District, p. 6.