[1] For instance, R.K. Narayan's short story 'Lawley Road' which also gave the title to one of his many short story collections: Lawley Road and Other Stories.

[2] India, 13-10-1906.

[3] MPAI, 1907, para 4(i).

[4] MPAI, 1908, para 1178(a).

[5] VOC's memoir of Bharati. See Venkatachalapathy, ed., Va.Oo.Chiyum Bharatiyum, pp. 44–45.

[6] MPAI, 1907, para 42.

[7] T&TD, p. 2.

[8] MPAI, 1908, para 74.

[9] 'The Tenets of the New Party' was a lecture delivered by Tilak on 2 January 1907 at Calcutta. In this lecture, Tilak clearly marked out the line dividing the Extremists and Moderates. Arguing that the rule of one country by another can never be permanent, he described 'boycott is a political weapon'. Given that Indians were 'willing instruments of our own oppression in the hands of an alien government', he called for 'active resistance' to offering help in policing and revenue collection and in fighting wars across frontiers. Bal Gangadhar Tilak: His Writings and Speeches, pp. 55–67.

[10] Neelakanta Brahmachari's signed statement of 11-8-1912 in G.O. no. 1610, Judicial (Confidential), 7-10-1912.

[11] Wynch to D.W.G. Cowie, the IG of Police, dated 20-3-1908, Bundle no. 43, 'Sedition in Tinnevelly, 1908,' Miscellaneous Papers.

[12] Bate, Protestant Textuality and the Tamil Modern, p. 70.

[13] Ibid., pp. 65, 66. Original emphasis.

[14] 'History Sheet of V.O. Chidambaram Pillai.'

[15] Tuticorin Chamber of Commerce, Minutes Book, vol. 1 (Nov. 1906–April 1913).

[16] G.O. no. 1016–17, Judicial & Confidential, 4-5-1914.

[17] T&TD, p. 2.

[18] Ibid., p. 16.

[19] Ibid., p. 8.

[20] Ibid., p. 15.