out there to explain what the Reserve Bank does. Just like my ninety-three-year-old mother-in-law, he gave me a detailed account of the pension he got, his growing monthly expenses and how it was becoming increasingly difficult to make ends meet. ‘Do something about the prices, sir, especially the price of cooking oil,’ he pleaded with me. It didn’t miss me that in his own innocent and polite way, he was seeking accountability from the Reserve Bank.

He made my day.
