7 Human Resource Management

AT3SSX

Learning Objectives

- Gain knowledge on recruitment process
- Understand the process of training new employees in food service operations
- Know the need for motivation
- Learn the leadership qualities
- Comprehend different methods of performance appraisal and wages.

Human Resource Management or Personnel management is highly important in a food service. One of the foremost functions of a food service manager is managing the workers who come from various backgrounds. Extraordinary skills and good human relations are needed for this. The aim of human resource management is to manage human resources effectively. Efficient contribution and work ethics as a professional of a working group leads to success of the food service operation.

The best human resource has to be selected wisely, placed in the suitable position following proper procedures and monitor the performance with adequate supervision. The steps involved in human resource management include:

1. Recruitment
2. Selection
3. Training and Motivation

DO YOU KNOW?

Who is the father of personnel management?

Robert Owen, a father of personnel management had contributed the dimension of welfare for employees in 1800's. His contribution in Factories Act 1819 helped to stop the employment of children less than 12 years of age, and also provided free schooling, housing, recreational facilities and limited working hours.

7.1 Recruitment

Recruitment is defined as "a process of searching for prospective employees and stimulating and encouraging them to apply for jobs in an organization". In a

FSM_Chapter 07.indd 145 1/13/2020 10:15:46 AM