Since cooked food cannot be stored for too long without its quality deteriorating, it is important to devise ways of incorporating it as soon as possible into new dishes or into dishes in which the food is unrecognizable. Yet there must be no relaxation in terms of the standards of quality food offered to customers.

Table 2.3 Common Leftover Foods and its Utilization

Type of foods	Ways of utilisation
Raw foods Leftover vegetables	■ Combine with other vegetables to prepare mixed grills, vegetable cutlets, using potatoes or cereals as the main base ingredients. ■ Steam as accompaniments to main meat dishes such as tandoori chicken or roasts, in stews, soups and sauces. ■ Use it raw for raithas, salads, garnishes and sandwich fillings. ■ Prepare vegetable carvings for display.
Leftover fruits	■ Eat as such if uncut. ■ Cut into fruit salad or chaat. ■ Mix with custard as dessert. ■ Blend into milkshake. ■ Extract juice. ■ Make ice-cream or cake. ■ Serve with fresh cream or ice-cream. ■ Prepare fruit carvings for display.
Partly cooked food Leftover eggs	■ Omelettes can be used as garnishes and for French toast. ■ Boiled eggs or fried eggs can be used as garnishing for biryani, pastes and spreads for sandwiches. ■ Eggs can be made into scotch eggs and as an ingredient in desserts.
Leftover Tomato onion salad	■ The tomato and onion can be separated and incorporated into dishes as an ingredient or used as garnishes. They can also be used as ■ An ingredient in soups, curries and sauces. ■ A garnishing in pizza topping, omelette, and dry mixtures

FSM_Chapter 02.indd 38 1/13/2020 9:44:38 AM