Type of foods	Ways of utilisation
Cooked Foods Leftover Tandoori chicken	This can be used as such or deboned and the meat can be used to prepare other dishes for the next day if properly refrigerated. In boned form: ■ Mini meal with salad. ■ Converted into curried or butter chicken. ■ Chicken biryani or pulao. In deboned form: ■ Minced and mixed with binding ingredients, shaped into fingers, cutlets or balls and deep fried to be served into snacks. ■ Shredded to prepare salads, noodles and fried rice. ■ Minced and used to prepare sandwich spreads. ■ To make soups, stews and mixed with sautéd vegetables. ■ Used in samosas, pizzas and stuffed parathas.
Left over vegetable pulao	This can be converted into ■ Vegetable balls or bondas, cutlets or tikkis to be served as snack. ■ Made into koftas or curry or deep fried. ■ Minced and used as coating or covering for cheese pakoras or fritters, scotch eggs, nargisikoftas. ■ Baked in an oven, mixed with white sauce and covered with cheese.

The possibilities of using leftovers still maintaining the high standards of quality in terms of freshness, appearance, colour, texture and acceptability is very important. Utilization of leftover foods require creative and careful regarding methods of storage.

In large food service operations leftovers are served to inmates of social institutions, like homes for the handicapped and orphanages. So food wastage can be prevented.

"Réchauffé" in the early 19th century from the French; it is the past participle of their verb "réchauffer," which means "to reheat." Nineteenth-century French speakers were using it figuratively to designate something that was already old hat-you might say, "warmed over." English speakers adopted that same meaning, which is still common. But within decades someone had apparently decided that leftovers would seem more appealing with a French name. The notion

FSM_Chapter 02.indd 39 1/13/2020 9:44:38 AM