3.4 Services in a Restaurant

A restaurant service should focus around customer's satisfaction and provide a fine dining experience. Every employee should take part in providing a wholesome dining experience to the guest and for this certain steps have to be followed during service.

3.4.1 Steps to be followed in a Restaurant service

For proper service of a restaurant, the following procedures should be followed by the employees.

Plate 3.70 Welcoming the Guest

- Greeting and seating the guests
- Taking orders
- Service
- Payment

1. Greeting and seating the guests

- A host (manager or supervisor in a restaurant) is responsible for greeting customers at the entrance.
- When the customer comes in, letting them know whether there will be a waiter find out the guests reservations. Verify the reservation dining and guide them to their table. If they have not reserved the table then find out the available table appropriate to the number of guests.
- Pull out the chair slightly so as to make it convenient for the guests to occupy the seat.
- If there are any small children in the group, offer them high chairs or booster seats.
- Opening napkins – When the guests take their seats, most of them unfold the napkins on their own and spread them on their laps. However, some guests wait for the waiters to do it for them.
- After the guests are seated, water is offered in most Indian restaurants. Chilled or warm water is offered according to the weather. These days most of them prefer mineral water.

2. Taking orders

- Once guests are seated, they are attended by the waiter.
- Menu card is presented to the guest from the right side.
- Waiters who take orders should have as much information as possible about the menu, day's special including ingredients.

Plate 3.71 Taking Orders

FSM_Chapter 03.indd 64 1/13/2020 9:49:56 AM