the family business as an unpaid apprentice in 1925, bypassing a university education altogether (something he regretted in his later years). When RD Tata died suddenly in 1926, Jehangir was left to take his father's place as director of Tata Sons, and shoulder the responsibility of caring for his family.

JAMSETJI TATA'S LEGACY

The Tata Group was founded by Jamsetji Nusserwanji Tata (1839–1901), who is often called the 'father of Indian industry'. Although he began as a cotton manufacturer and trader, the company he set up would go on to become one of India's largest industrial enterprises. JN Tata pioneered many progressive employee welfare schemes, including pensions and accident compensation. Among a variety of philanthropic donations, he helped fund the Indian Institute of Science, Bangalore, and endowed a scholarship that continues to help Indian students pursue higher education abroad.

In recognition of his efforts in laying the foundations of Indian industry, Jamsetji Tata's obituary said: "He sought no honour and he claimed no privilege; but the advancement of India and her myriad peoples, was with him an abiding passion."