MOHANDAS KARAMCHAND GANDHI

1869–1948

The making of the Mahatma

Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi was the son of Karamchand Gandhi, the dewan of the princely state of Porbandar, and Putlibai. Young Mohandas travelled to London at eighteen to study law. In 1893, now a qualified lawyer, he accepted a job that took him to the British colony of Natal, South Africa. There, he was struck by the blatant racial discrimination that Indian workers were subjected to. Gandhi himself was famously thrown out of a first-class train carriage because it was meant for whites only. Determined to fight back, he threw himself into campaigning for Indians' rights by drafting
