socialist country, everyone would cooperate and share resources, with the government helping to ensure this.

JIVATRAM BHAGWANDAS KRIPALANI

1888–1982

JB Kripalani studied history and economics in Pune before becoming a teacher. He joined the Congress in the 1920s and was an ardent follower of Gandhi. Always a man who spoke his mind, Kripalani left the Congress in 1951, after several years of disagreements with the party's leadership. Like Gandhi, he felt strongly that India's future lay in its villages. He founded the Kisan Mazdoor Praja Party, hoping to strengthen local government and work towards improving the lives of India's poor. Kripalani was known for his strong principles and uncompromising criticism of his colleagues. Along with Jayaprakash Narayan, he led the resistance against Indira Gandhi's government, also serving time in prison for it.
