However, since one had to travel to England to take these exams, only the wealthiest Indians could aspire to this.

ALLADI KRISHNASWAMI IYER

1883–1953

Born in present-day Andhra Pradesh, AK Iyer was a successful and well-regarded lawyer who served as Advocate General of Madras State for many years. He was considered by his peers to be one of the most successful lawyers of his generation. Although not a politician, his reputation as a legal expert and his extensive knowledge of both Indian and foreign law made him a valuable asset to the Constituent Assembly. He was part of nine committees, including the ones on fundamental rights and the government's powers as well as the Drafting Committee. His contributions included defining who would be considered a citizen of India and highlighting the differences between the fundamental rights and the directive principles.
