who captained the gold-medal-winning Indian field hockey team at the 1928 Summer Olympics. After his return to India in the 1930s, he joined the Adivasi movement, which sought to represent India’s marginalized tribal communities. Singh was elected to the Constituent Assembly as an independent candidate. A tireless activist for tribal rights, he highlighted their lack of representation in government and the extreme exploitation they had faced for centuries. For his efforts, he earned the title ‘marang gomke’ or ‘great leader’ among the people he represented.
