FORGING A NATION

All of India had never really been one political entity before 1947, and it took time for the diverse population to find a shared identity. The people in this section led movements that challenged and shaped the idea of what it meant to be Indian, by highlighting the many other identities—regional, linguistic, tribal—that people had.

TANGUTURI PRAKASAM PANTULU