Bayi, who championed women's education and promoted capable women to positions of power. Her aid enabled hundreds of women to study law, medicine, history, the natural sciences and mathematics.

EDAVALETH KAKKAT JANAKI AMMAL

1897–1984

"MY WORK IS WHAT WILL SURVIVE."

Edavaleth Kakkat Janaki Ammal was born into a large backward caste family in Tellicherry (now Thalassery, Kerala). A nature enthusiast from her childhood, she was possibly the first Indian woman to receive a doctorate in botany in the US in 1931. Despite this, she was subjected to caste and gender discrimination back home in India. She moved to England in 1939–
