

“Professional knowledge and professional competence have to be acquired by hard work and by constant study. In this fast-moving technologically developing world, you can never acquire sufficient professional knowledge.”

Sam Manekshaw, 1998

When India gained independence in 1947, one of the most crucial things the new government became responsible for was defence. India would have to be able to defend itself from threats both from within the country and from outside its borders.

Fortunately, the British had left the nation with a well-developed armed force. The Indian Army had its roots in the East India Company’s armed troops that safeguarded English trading centres and routes, while the Indian Navy’s origins lay in the vessels that had protected the Company’s
