I thank former Prime Minister Inder Kumar Gujral for his wise and abiding friendship over half a century and former Foreign Minister Raja Dinesh Singh, who also treated me as a member of his own family whenever I visited him in India, as his dear nephew, my former student Madhukar Shah, still does. Another of my dearest old Indian friends, Chhote Bharany, father of my former student Mahesh, has introduced me to more leading Indo-Pakistani negotiators for peace at his house parties than I have ever met in either Islamabad or New Delhi.

I am grateful to Pakistan's Foreign Minister Makhdoom S.M. Qureshi for his kind and warm encouragement at our recent meeting at Consul-General Abbas's house in Los Angeles. I must also thank my oldest Pakistani friends, Khalid Shamsul Hassan and Ardeshir Cowasjee, for teaching me so much about their troubled state. I thank Sardar Mumtaz Ali Bhutto and his son Ali for sharing his recent articles with me, and his daughter, Tasi, and her husband, Rizvan Kehar. Former Prime Minister and Minister of Finance Shaukat Aziz most kindly helped me during my past few visits to Pakistan.

Many wonderful friends in Los Angeles have introduced me to leaders of India and Pakistan, with whom I have been privileged to discuss Kashmir. My dearest Indian friend, Dr. A. S. Marwah, helped me meet with Prime Minister Manmohan Singh during my last visit to Delhi. And thanks to my ever-faithful friend Firoze Dordi, I have always been able to fly to India at short notice. Pakistan's good Dr. M. Shah and his brilliant wife, Fiza, founder of the finest female educational charity in Pakistan, Developments in Literacy, helped us to organize our Kashmir conference in 2002, as did Rafique Khan and his distinguished Kashmiri wife. Lloyd Cotson has long generously supported many academic projects at UCLA, least of which has been my quest for peace in South Asia, through our International Studies and Overseas Program when it was led by Dean John Hawkins, to whom I am also most grateful.

My best friend at UCLA, Harvey Perloff, founding dean of architecture and urban planning, taught me so much about problem-solving and futuristic planning that I can hardly thank him enough for his help whenever we talked about the problems of India, Pakistan, and Kashmir over lunch or dinner. Nor can I adequately thank his wife, Mimi, one of the greatest human beings I have ever had the privilege of knowing.

Stan Holwitz, my dear friend and great University of California Press editor, urged me to write this book long years ago, and when I finally
