UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon has recently insisted that “the Kashmir question . . . of nearly six decades will not go away and an effort is urgently required to resolve it.”[4] The question that remains, however, is just how best to achieve that still singularly elusive resolution.