discussion to be adjourned to the next day citing paucity of time to discuss such a cardinal provision. That said, his primary objection was not to the insertion of Bharat in Draft Article 1, but was with respect to the use of 'Union of States' since he favoured the concept of a republic as opposed to a Union of States. After a lot of back and forth on the issue of adjournment, the matter was finally adjourned to another date. This effectively meant that the question of the naming of the country was taken up meaningfully only on 18 September 1949, which was the date on which the Article was finally adopted.[23]

On 18 September, when the issue was finally taken up, H.V. Kamath proposed Bharat and Hind as alternatives to India. Following is the relevant excerpt of the debate, which also showcases Dr. Ambedkar's brusqueness in hearing out other members of the Assembly on such an important issue:

> Mr. President: The House will now take up article 1. I think Mr. Kamath has moved amendment 220 and finished his speech.
>
> Shri H.V. Kamath: I have not finished my speech, Sir.
>
> Mr. President: Then, go ahead.
>
> Shri H.V. Kamath: I move
>
> 'That in amendment No. 130 of List IV (Eighth Week), for the proposed clause (1) of article 1, the following be substituted:-
>
> (1) Bharat or, in the English language, India, shall be a Union of States.'
>
> or, alternatively, 'That in amendment No. 130 of List IV (Eighth Week), for the proposed clause (1) of article 1, the following be substituted:
>
> "(1) Hind, or, in the English language, India, shall be a Union of States."'
>
> Taking my first amendment first, amendment No. 220, it is customary among most peoples of the world to have what is called a Namakaran or a naming ceremony for the new-born. India as a Republic is going to be born very shortly and naturally there has been a movement in the country among many sections—almost all sections—of the people that this birth of the new Republic should be accompanied by a Namakaran ceremony as well. There are various suggestions put forward as to the proper name which should be given to this new baby of the Indian Republic. The prominent suggestions