The year 2012 was when Ratan would step down. By this time, under his stewardship, Tata Tea, and later TGBL, underwent major transformations in its product range, abjuring unhealthy products and encouraging healthy drinks. It expanded to new geographies, successfully concluding a spate of acquisitions to become a multinational. It was one of the Tata companies that successfully implemented the major recommendations of Ratan's Strategic Plan.

Consequently, Ratan had succeeded in transforming TGBL into a larger and more confident company. It had dislodged Hindustan Unilever to become the leader of India's branded tea market by volume as well as value. Its standalone revenue witnessed a growth of nearly 184 per cent (1991–2001). By the end of Ratan's tenure as chairman, Tata Sons, the standalone revenue of Rs 290 crore had increased to Rs 7,351 crore (consolidated). TGBL's revenue had multiplied by more than twenty-five times. The market cap had increased from Rs 1,641 crore in 1993 to Rs 7,906 crore in 2013, a nearly 382 per cent increase.

Specifically, for the period 1994–95 to 2012–13, when Ratan was its chairman, TGBL's revenue witnessed a staggering growth. During the period 1995–2001 the standalone revenue had grown by 106 per cent. By the time Ratan had stepped down, the standalone revenue of Rs 398 crore (1994–95) had skyrocketed to Rs 7,351 crore (consolidated) in 2013. By the time Ratan stepped down the standalone revenue of Rs 398 crore (1994–95) had skyrocketed to Rs 7,351 crore (consolidated) in 2013. During this period its EBITDA had surged by nearly 1,031 per cent. When Ratan stepped down as chairman of the group and the company, its revenue (standalone and consolidated) had multiplied by more than eighteen times.

The ambition to grow and think big at TGBL did not end with Ratan's tenure. His philosophy had got ingrained in the DNA of the group and its companies; TGBL was no exception. Thinking big, in 2015, 'the company announced an ambitious target of becoming a Rs 30,000-crore entity by 2020 and push[ing] its India growth with focus on three verticals—tea, coffee and water'.

In May 2019, the company, yet again, decided to re-brand itself to 'reflect the new strategic direction', which involved the creation of a focused consumer products company. It was renamed Tata Consumer Products Limited on 7 February 2020.
