October 2007, LOI was not issued to them till January 2008'. Similarly, 'Tata Teleservices Ltd. were not allocated GSM spectrum till September 2010', nearly two and a half years after some others had got it.

Some sections of the press ignored the CAG's findings and continued to target the Tata Group. The group on its part pushed back and stopped 'participating in news stories' with the sections of the media it reckoned were publishing stories without proper investigation and supporting evidence. This made some of those affected allege that the Tatas had stopped associating with them and had also withdrawn advertisement from certain publications.

Christabelle Noronha, chief, group corporate affairs, Tata Sons, denied the allegations and clarified that there was no such 'ban' on the publications as alleged. She, however, stated, '… there had been an instruction to group companies to not participate in news stories being done by the "offending publications and channels"'.

The CAG's finding that the Tatas were discriminated against, did not, however, put an end to the campaign against it. The report was ignored by some. In December 2016, the politician Subramanian Swamy filed a case before the special CBI court for the prosecution of Ratan, A. Raja, Ramesh Chandra of Unitech, Radia, some CBI officers and others under various provisions of the Indian Penal Code, the Prevention of Money Laundering Act and the Prevention of Corruption Act.

The complainant alleged that the CBI in its charge sheet had deliberately excluded the people he had named, even when there was adequate material on record to proceed against them. It also referred to a real-estate JV between TTSL and Unitech regarding land in Gurugram, Haryana. Swamy alleged that the JV was being used as a cover for money laundering and to acquire a 'GSM spectrum licence under dual technology', for which Tata Realty and Infrastructure Limited (TRIL) had paid Unitech. However, TRIL clarified that it was a 'bona fide' deal with 'no relation' to the 2G scam and that the Tata Group remained 'committed to the highest standards of ethics and business conduct'.

In March 2017, the special court heard Swamy's complaint and asked him to 'bring more material in support' of his allegations. The court added that his complaint was simply built on 'presumption and assumption' and he was required to support it with 'reasonable material'. In May, the case was
