In comparison, when the performance of these six companies during the period 1 January 2013–21 October 2016 (when Mistry was chairman, Tata Sons), is analysed, then the average of the absolute percentage growth of the six companies was 51.81 per cent while the absolute change in the Sensex was 44 per cent. Therefore, the six companies on the average outperformed the Sensex by 7.28 per cent during Mistry's chairmanship, in comparison to nearly 22 per cent during Ratan's tenure as stated above. The performance of the companies during Ratan's leadership may have been better if it were not for the global economic crisis that began in 2007. When there is a downturn in the economy, tourism (IHCL) and manufacturing industries (in the present case, Tata Steel and Tata Motors) are amongst the most impacted.

The performance of all the listed Tata companies for which data is available during Ratan's (1993–2013) reveal a higher AAGR across several parameters. The market cap of these companies grew at a rate nearly double than when Mistry was at the helm (2013–16). Similarly, the AAGR of EBITDA under Ratan was more than four and a half times than during the Mistry years.

Two days after Mistry wrote to the shareholders, on 7 December 2016, Ratan wrote a similar letter. In it, he gave his justification for Mistry's removal. He said that the former chairman was appointed as a director in Tata companies 'only as a corollary to his being the Chairman of Tata Sons'. After he ceased to be the chairman, 'the right step would have been for him to resign as Director. Unfortunately, he has not yet done so, and his continued presence as a Director is a serious disruptive influence on these Company Boards, which can make the company dysfunctional, particularly given his open hostility towards the primary promoter, Tata Sons', he added.

Within a week of Mistry's letter, Wadia also addressed the boards of the Tata companies in which he served as a director—Tata Steel, Tata Motors and Tata Chemicals. Wadia's letters contained the details of his association with each of them and the events that led to Tata Sons to seek his removal from the companies.

Wadia said that the notion that he was working in concert with Mistry was 'false and baseless'. He also stated that he had sent notices for defamation against Tata Sons for 'carrying on a personal vendetta' against
