After the meeting, Mistry's camp tried to downplay the significance of the removal, stating that the outcome was 'foregone'. Sources close to Mistry told PTI, as reported in a business magazine, 'Tata Teleservices like TCS entails a super majority ownership by the Tata Group currently under the control of Ratan … Being a closely held company the outcome isn't surprising at all.'

Meanwhile, by mid-December, the outcry against Mistry for making allegations against the group grew sharper. The Tata Motors Employees' Union, Pune, reaffirmed its support for Ratan and denounced Mistry for making 'deliberately misleading' statements. It expressed dismay that Mistry could resort to such 'immature actions'. In the letter, the members refuted his allegations and said that they had 'lost faith' in his leadership as they were unconvinced of his initiatives.

On 19 December, a day before the IHCL EGM, Mistry resigned from the six Tata company boards, out of which he was also chairman of four. It was a two-sentence resignation letter. But along with it, Mistry attached a statement, which was a melange of his 22 November and 5 December communications. In it, he stated that the Shapoorji Pallonji Group had only played a 'guardianship' role with regard to Tata Sons. It was, however, a claim that contrasted with the versions of J.J. Irani, N.A. Soonawala and Ratan on how the Mistrys had come to accumulate the shares of the holding company.

Mistry reiterated that Ratan had persuaded him to be the chairman of Tata Sons. Mistry declared that for 'cleaning up governance and regaining lost ethical ground', he would seek a 'larger platform' where the 'rule of law and equity is upheld', a euphemism for shifting the battle to the courts.

A day after his resignation, two investment companies supported by the Mistry family, Cyrus Investments and Sterling Investments Corporation, filed a case against Tata Sons at the National Company Law Tribunal (NCLT), Mumbai, alleging mismanagement and oppression of minority stakeholders. Two days after filing the case, the tribunal 'recorded that no party would "initiate any action or proceedings over this subject matter pending disposal of this company petition"'.

With Mistry resigning, the scheduled Tata Power EGM was not held, as the only agenda was his removal. The IHCL EGM was, however, held as scheduled. Shapoor Mistry, Keki Dadiseth, Ireena Vittal, Vibha Paul Rishi and Gautam Banerjee absented themselves from the meeting. Following
