Mistry's resignation, the two directors who had supported him, Analjit Singh and Darius Pandole, resigned from TGBL's board.

Ratan was accompanied to all the EGMs by his two sisters, Shireen and Deanna. Besides the family, Soonawala, Krishna Kumar, Deepak Parekh, Nadir Godrej and Mehernosh Kapadia attended the meeting. There was also a surprise attendee, Anil Goel, a former executive director and CFO at IHCL, who acted as a representative of Tata Capital and attended the meeting to clarify the allegations that Mistry had made against IHCL.

The next EGM was that of Tata Steel. With Mistry resigning, the only agenda was the removal of Wadia as director. One day before the meeting, Wadia once again wrote to the company's shareholders. He summarized what he had sent in his first communication and reiterated that Ratan's policy on Tata Steel Europe would be 'detrimental to the interest of the shareholders'.

He also raised the issue of insider trading and said that he would not attend the EGM. The EGM was chaired by O.P. Bhatt, the interim chairman. Wadia's message to the board was read out. Ratan was received with a standing ovation when he arrived at the crowded hall. Eighty-eight shareholders participated in the EGM, out of which only four were in favour of Mistry. Sanjeev Choudhary, a second-generation employee of Tata Steel, declared that 'the entire Jharkhand tribal population will come en masse to Mumbai' in support of Ratan, if required. He said that in his thirty-seven years of being associated with the company, Wadia 'had not seen how workers work in dust and fumes, in hot furnaces' and that he 'did not deserve a place on [the] Tata Steel Board'.

A third-generation employee shareholder, Bhaskar Tiwari, who had served the company for thirty-five years, spoke of how the Tatas were wired into his being and existence. He said that his father took a loan and bought Tata Steel shares forty years ago and they are 'emotionally retained by him'. He said that he was 'upset that Mr Tata who is worshipped as God in Jamshedpur, today at the age of seventy-nine years has to [adorn] the leadership role at Tatas to restore the legacy which has been vitiated by Mr Cyrus and Mr Wadia'.

Another employee shareholder, Sanjay Kumar Singh, said that Ratan had the 'full support of all people in Jamshedpur and they are with him in this
