than the GDP of all but five of the fifty-four nations of Africa with only Egypt, Nigeria, South Africa, Algeria and Morocco having higher GDP than the group's turnover in 2022) is what dreams are made of.

Ratan is confident that under the new chairman, the group would thrive. He describes Chandrasekaran as a 'sound leader' with a 'clean record', a man of 'integrity' who is 'well regarded by the people he interacts with'. He is quite sure that Chandrasekaran would avoid the 'chaos' that had compelled Ratan to return as the interim chairman and would get the 'group back to normalcy' and 'bring stability'.

A day after the board had approved Chandrasekaran's appointment, Ratan tweeted expressing his confidence in the new chairman's capabilities: 'The job is complex but I am sure he will take the Group to new heights while protecting the Group's values and ethics at all times.'

Chandrasekaran, on his part, expressed his resolve to work towards addressing the many problems that the group was facing. On his appointment, he said: 'At the Tata Group, we are at an inflection point. I am aware that this role comes with huge responsibilities. It will be my endeavour to help progress the group with the ethos, ethics and values that the Tata Group has been built on.'

On 17 February, Chandrasekaran took charge. There was all-round appreciation for the choice. One of the earliest to hail the decision was S. Ramadorai, his mentor. He declared that it was a natural choice. He appreciated his protégé's 'hard work' and said that his 'key strengths are focus and problem solving'.

On the day of taking charge, Chandrasekaran sent a mail to all the employees, outlining what his priorities as chairman would be. Interestingly, his mail echoed virtually all the priorities that Ratan had outlined during his chairmanship.

The need to 'innovate and take risks', the importance of the trust in the Tata brand, the sanctity of the TCoC, the need to 'lead, not follow', to create value for shareholders, to ensure 'relentless focus on the customer', 'reinvent … businesses for the future' were some of the focus areas he highlighted in his mail. Importantly, it underscored the significance of building synergy and unity and harnessing the potential of 'One Tata'.

In his first town hall interaction in April 2017 too, Chandrasekaran reinforced the idea of 'One Tata'. This also found expression in the 3S strategy, as underscored in the Tata Group Annual Review 2021–22. Its
