Since Chandrasekaran's appointment, Tata Sons has seen a phase of sterling growth and smooth relations with Tata Trusts. As chairman, Tata Trusts, Ratan is consulted and his advice sought, within the framework of good governance, before any important decision is taken by Tata Sons. This mechanism has kept alive the tradition of treating the 66 per cent owner of Tata Sons as the most important stakeholder. It has spawned an era that has made Chandrasekaran the legacy guardian.

Both Ratan and Chandrasekaran took over the reins of Tata Sons during momentous phases in the economic history of the country. Ratan steered Tata Sons through the most difficult transitory phase spawned by the economic liberalization, crafting an extraordinarily successful transformation at a time when any failure would have proved disastrous. Chandrasekaran has now begun the journey to adjust to a new digital world. And he is handling it with the finesse of a maestro, for no other chairman of a conglomerate knows more than him about the digital universe. It is his turf.
