dog, suggested that they would take Tango home. Today Ratan has only Tito, named after his very first German Shepherd, for whom every evening is invariably reserved. He does not like anyone or any programme to disturb that schedule. He says that the time he spends with Tito is the best time of the day for him.

Ratan has also taken several initiatives to provide better medical care for canines. In 2016, he invested an undisclosed amount in a pet care portal called DogSpot.in. The company which sells grooming products for dogs, besides food and accessories, was seen as an upcoming sector by him. Ratan has also invested in start-ups for bettering the lives of dogs.

His love for dogs saw him provide a home for the strays in the iconic Bombay House. As a Financial Times article commented, thus was born a 'pack of real life slum dog millionaires'. During the nine-month-long renovation, while the employees of Tata House were briefly shuttled between the headquarters and their temporary office, even the four-legged occupants were taken along.

When the renovated building was inaugurated in July 2018, the dogs got a room of their own. It was well-stocked with feeding bowls, chewies, toys, dog biscuits, treats, mattresses and a plush resting area, besides water and food. A leading newspaper titled their story on this: 'All for furry friends: Ratan Tata dedicates part of Bombay House 2.0 to stray dogs'. The dogs are only belted and not chained, and they have the freedom to move about. There are two large windows that look out onto the street and the kennel even provides a separate bathing area for the dogs' weekly Saturday baths.

Among the dogs, Goa, who got his name as he jumped into the car of a Tata executive in Goa and got off only on reaching Bombay House, has become Ratan's favourite. Goa reciprocates the love in equal measure. It was said that while Ratan was chairman, Tata Sons, 'he [Goa] would wait for Mr Tata to arrive each morning at Bombay House and ride up the elevator with him. Goa had even earmarked a couch to sleep on in the office'.

Then Goa became the boss of Ratan's third-floor office in the Elphinstone building until the end of 2019 when the office was shut on account of the COVID pandemic. He had shifted with Ratan when he demitted office as chairman, Tata Sons. His bed too was moved to the meeting room of the new building. During the day, he was brought there and at night, he returned to his swanky place in Bombay House.
